FROM THE PREACHER'S DESK

BY: DAVID OLMOS

This past Sunday evening, following my lesson, I was sitting in the pew trying to sing the song that Bro. Ratcliff had selected, but I couldn't get a single note out of my mouth without my throat hurting and a cough screaming out. As most of you know the Olmos family was recently stricken with Covid. I am grateful every day for God helping us get through it with nothing more than a bad cough. Unfortunately for me, one symptom that stuck with me longer than I wished was a bad case of laryngitis. Having inflamed vocal cords can make it impossible to sing, let alone preach in the pulpit without squealing. I never realized how important my voice was until Covid had taken it away.

I know things could be worse, which is what I tell myself every day; however, I can't help but think about certain things we do that we often take for granted. Take for example the simple task of turning on or off a light when you enter or leave a room. I don't think twice when it comes to such an easy task, but for someone struggling with a disability, it comes with many concerns. In my efforts to better understand the struggles that some with disabilities deal with, I was introduced to a young woman named Keisha who was diagnosed with Limb-Girdle Muscular Dystrophy. On the subject of things people take for granted, she had this to say, "Many of us hate when we get in bed, have gotten halfway through a good book, started to doze off, and remember we have to turn off the light. What may seem like a simple task to anyone without a chronic illness or disability can now feel like a nightmare. Can I make it to the light without falling? What if I fall on the way back in the dark? Should I take my phone just in case? Is it even worth it?"

So, there I was sitting in the pew, wanting to sing out loud and I couldn't. My first thought was all those times that I didn't sing with the compassion that I should've, had I been taking for granted something I do regularly. Then I had this overwhelming feeling of wanting to fast-forward life to get to the point where things were back to the way they were. I told myself in that moment, when I get my voice back I won't take the ability to sing praises to God for granted. Here's the point, I know not everyone has the "voice of an Angel." I also know that not everyone can read the notes on the page, but that doesn't matter. There are people in this world who wish they had a voice to sing at all but don't have that privilege. If you do, then don't take that for granted.

Honestly, this article isn't even about singing, it's about having a righteous heart. We don't know what people are going through in their lives. We don't know what struggles they might be dealing with, or perhaps what things might seem easy to us, but to them is quite difficult. As Christians, we need to live with this truth in our hearts. It might be easy for you to not (insert the sin here), but it might not be the case for everyone. Be grateful you don't struggle where others might, and do not take for granted those things that aren't hard for you. Perhaps you can help those who are struggling. Is that not a command given by God? "Do not neglect to do good and to share what you have, for such sacrifices are pleasing to God," (Hebrews 13:16). I realize now, as I conclude how silly it was to be bothered with my laryngitis because I know that it's getting better every day. To those struggling with physical disabilities that can never go away, I am sorry for ever taking for granted what might not come easy for you. For those struggling with spiritual issues, while it might be easy for me to let go of certain sins or temptations, I know it might not be for you, but I am here to help. All you have to do is ask! God bless and have a great week!

Youth Devos

We are NEEDING hosts for our Youth Devotionals. There is a sign-up sheet in the foyer. They are scheduled for Sundays following evening service. If you would like to host a devo, please sign up!

We are continuing to collect gently used items for the Impact garage sale. The deadline for donations has been changed to Wednesday, January 24th.
